DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This home is in a picturesque setting along the artificial lake created by Atkinson Reservoir. It is L-shaped and composed of four sections. The oldest portion of the dwelling is located easternmost and adjacent to it is a two-story addition. The other leg of the L is a two-story building of two parts, the one closest to the older leg consisting of a mid-Nineteenth Century structure and the other dating from the 1920's. All of the walls are of uncoursed stone with quoined corners, and the doors have stone sills and lintels. From this point each section will be discussed separately.

One and one-half story section

This is the oldest part of the house, being two bays by one. The windows are 6 X 6, in pegged sashes, and a 2 X 2 attic glass is on the eastern gable. A doorway, also pegged, is built into the southern wall, and this is enclosed with a partially-finished porch. A massive stone chimney is on the eastern end of the roof and flush with the wall. The roof is tin and gable-flank. Shed dormers are on either side of the roof.

Older two-story section

Attached to the other section is this two and one-half story building, being three openings across along the north-south facades and two on the east-west walls. The east-west gable-ends also possess two 2 X 2 attic openings. Again, the regular windows are 6 X 6, only these frames are nailed. A doorway is located on the southern embrasure, covered by a three-bay shed-roof porch. Gabled dormers are on either side of the roof, which is a tin gable-flank, like the older section of the house. The upper wall is trimmed with a box cornice. Stone flush-end flues are sited on the eastern and western extremes.

The perpendicular wing

This part of the complex is two-storied. The building is in two parts, the portion closest to the older house dating from the middle of the 1800's, while the other dates from the 1920's. Overall, it is three bays by one, with the northernmost windows being casements. The rest of them are 6 X 6. A door is positioned on the eastern aspect of the older half, crowned with a leaded transom. The roof is gable-flank and slate covered, with a box cornice underneath. A pillared pediment shelters the portal on this section.

The interior

The oldest part of the house also served as a kitchen and once contained a huge fireplace. At one time, the upper level was a loft, but the ceiling has since been removed. A rear circular stairway to this loft still remains. The older two-story section has retained most of the original chair rails, shoe molding and beaded beams. The hallway of the newer two story section runs longways and is connected to the original entrance at the rear of the old two-story section. The stairway is in this hall and has a curved bannister end on the first floor. All of the first floor rooms have fireplaces, and the mid-1800 portion features architrave trim around the windows. The second and third floor rooms are completely finished, with the third level once serving as a nursery. The cellar still has a dirt floor as well as fireplace arches.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This house is claimed to be a home built by John Hall of Cranberry in 1701, but in actuality Hall's house, called Shandy Hall, was erected in 1701 along Bush River. This house is nevertheless Eighteenth Century in nature, definitely in the case of the two older sections. The deeds recorded the earliest owner of the land to be a Henrietta Delaney, who owned a massive 1307-acre tract called Clagett's Forest. In 1759 she conveyed the tract to one John Beal Bardley, who owned it until 1800 when John Stewart purchased it. This farm, when it was operating, became known as Glen Echo Farm, and is located on parts of the same tract that Monmouth Farm is. The 1878 Martenet Map lists the owner of Glen Echo to be Wakeman Bevard. In 1942, the property was taken over by the United States Government and was eventually sold to the Board of Education of Harford County in 1947.

The Outbuildings

All of these are east of the present house. Furthest out are the stone walls of what was once a barn. The oldest outbuilding is what appears to be a combination smokehouse and slave quarters. It is in three compartments and faces westwards. The walls are stone, and the gable-flank roof, with ~~shed~~ wings on either side, is made of tin. All three doors are westward-facing, and the only windows are near the southeastern corner. North of this is an icehouse, built into a mound of earth and consisting of a lathed sided shed with a gable front roof. Again, the door is on the western side. Behind the icehouse is a corncrib, typified by a gable-front slate roof and vertical frame siding.
